DEVELOPMENT OF CANVAS-WINGED SAILING SHIP

The Russian bark August recently loading at the Hastings sawmill, British Columbia, is a true type of bark, having three masts, two square-rigged and one fore-and-aft. The four-masted German bark Schiffbek, which has just been towed to sea with a full cargo at the Hastings mill, was not a true bark. The bark rig is the oldest rig seen on a vessel now. It appeared first in the thirteenth century. The type of vessel called a caravel, in which the able and daring Portuguese and Spanish sailors sailed on their voyages of romance and adventure, and in which they made their great discoveries, was rigged in this way except that the mizzen mast had a lateen sail.

The Schiffbek, though called a bark, is really a four-masted ship fore-and-aft rigged on the spanker mast. The word bark, of course, is generic, like the word ship, and bark is the correct spelling. The word is as old as navigation. It is nearly as old as the word ship, which began life as "scoop" or "scap." As the dictionary writer says, "the derivation of the word points to the fundamental conception by which when realized a means of flotation was obtained superior to the raft," which is a ponderous way of saying that the word ship denoted a vessel hollowed out.

The first vessel that depended for flotation on something other than the mere buoyancy of the material was, of course, a dug-out or fire-hollowed canoe, and no man knows how early the time was of which Virgil is speaking when he says, "Rivers then first the hollowed alders felt."

At the present time, in the last days of sail, there are more barks afloat than vessels carrying any other offshore sailing rig. Probably this rig was always more common at sea than any other. It is almost the same now as in the time of Columbus, except that it has lost the lateen. While the brig was called the handiest and ablest of all square-rigs, the bark was always the most popular with ship-owners for large vessels, because it required less hands to work it than the ship rig. The bark has several variations, one of which is called barkentine. This is a vessel with more than one fore-and-aft rigged mast. Nearly all the early steamers were barkentine rigged. Many warships when steam was young were rigged as barkentines. The famous old ironclad Agincourt was a five-masted barkentine.

The schooner rig is also very old, and was not as many believe an American invention. There is in existence a seventeenth century print representing the siege of Dunkirk, in which are shown plainly vessels rigged as the modern schooner, with mainsail, foresail and jib; the foresail smaller than the main. The siege of Dunkirk was in 1658. This vessel was then common on the coasts of Flanders and Normandy and was called a goelette. The modern French word goelette. Galliot is nearly the same word. The early American schooners carried square canvas on the foremast.

As a step from the dug-out toward the invention of the ship, the Canadian birch-bark canoe was "the rudimentary ship, with the framework of longitudinal bottom boards, and ribs and cross bars, giving the necessary stiffness to the covering material. The next step was vessels of planks, stitched or bolted together with inserted ribs and decks or half-decks, and the last step was vessels in which the frame was first set up and the planking of the hull nailed on to them. The first vessel was the single log of buoyant wood, not hollowed out but pointed at the ends.

"What is it?"
"Dollar bills marked down to 99 cents."

'OUR OWN' BEEF TRUST UNDER BRITISH PROBE

[Associated Press] LONDON, July 8.—The Corporation of the City of London is holding a private inquiry into the alleged control of the English meat supply by the big American beef companies. It was proposed at a recent meeting of the corporation that the development of these companies be clipped by placing a limit upon the number of stalls they may hold in the Smithfield market, but upon adverse report by a special committee, it was decided not to interfere. The committee reported that the conditions of the business and the nature of the trade have very materially changed during the last ten years, and that the tendency to eliminate the middleman, or commission agent, and to concentrate the trade into fewer hands had affected the meat trade as well as other industries. The corporation decided, however, by 90 votes to 70, to have a private inquiry to ascertain which sections of the market, if any, are under American control. It is asserted that many of the Smithfield salesmen are financed by what is called "trust funds" but the extent of the American influence in Smithfield is not known.

"I thought you were working on Jay Krank's new house," said a house painter's friend. "I was going to," replied the house painter. "but I had a quarrel with him, and he said he'd put the nail on himself." "And he'd do it?" "Yes, that is where he put most of it."—Philadelphia Press
